Contract signed in AMS class

by Ruby Stewart

The Associated Students of Society and the Adams Family Inc., have reached a settlement signified by the official contract signing Monday morning.

"We've worked hard for three weeks. This contract has been signed in good faith," commented Adams Family Inc. President, Nigel Adams.

Breakdowns in negotiations occurred when students became dissatisfied with the workload and began working on a satisfactory proposal. Keith Bell said, "This class has helped to give insight into the trials of the common man and what he has to do to get a liveable wage and has provided me with insight into the daily life of unions and how they work."

President of the union, Mark Harris, noted that emotions ran high during contract negotiations. "If people do get too emotional, it is because of its importance to them; it is their livelihood," commented Harris.

Students responded with insight about what they are learning in the class that would be significant for the future. Several students expressed a need for concern as labor and management strive for compromise. Julie Denmore stated, "It can automatically become a situation where they are at each other's throats." Other students commented on the ability of this class to work together. Some had been involved with unions and were unimpressed with what they had seen in the past. "I've never liked unions in spite of family members being involved, but I've seen it working here," said student Brian Mead.

One of the most important things students taking this class learned is that no specific branch of the union is more important than the others. It's each particular student's duty to vote. The class has made each student more aware of job requirements and personal rights as a worker.

The class, taught by Dr. Nigel Adams, is entitled American Worker in Society, and is designed to make students aware of their rights, both as students and members of the work force. By participating in a mock corporation as well as a mock union, students gain knowledge in compromise, listening and organizational skills.

"If college and university body leaders were as well organized and disciplined as this class is, students wouldn't be as abused by the legislative cutbacks as they have been. The result is that students take it when they are not organized. Students could have a greater effect on the quality of instruction and education," according to Adams. Dr. Adams continued on to say, "We have learned a fundamental lesson in compromise. Everyone here is equal whether we like it or not. It involves real life whether we like each other or not."

Netters in search of state title

by Mike Thueringer

This weekend the Green River men's and women's tennis teams go out in search of yet more state titles to add to their already impressive collection.

The teams combined have won eight state titles in the past seven years. The men have won five of the eight with the women picking up three.

Kurt Leonhard, the number one men's singles player, has a 10-3 record against community college competition. Leonhard avenged one of his losses by defeating Scott Hayes in straight sets the second time they played.

Eric Boe at the number two position has not lost a match to a community college competition in the past two years while playing for Green River. Doug Lehmann in the number three spot has a combined record of 11-1 against community colleges.

Phil Wildberger has an overall record of 18-0, not losing a set all season. Wildberger is a strong contender for a state title at number four singles.

Jim Robison at number five is 13-1 overall with his only loss coming from a third set loss against Bellevue's Kirk Watari. He made up for that loss Tuesday with a 6-3, 6-3 victory.

Mike Van Eycke at number six has a 14-1 record with his only loss being against Whitman. Van Eycke is the number six defending state champion.

In doubles the Green River men are even tougher with the number one, two and three teams not losing a match to an opponent all season. The number one team of Doug Lehmann and Eric Boe are last year's doubles champions.

Kurt Leonhard and Phil Wildberger are looking for a state title at the number two position. Mark Van Eycke and Mike Thueringer in the number three doubles spot will also be in the competition for a state title.

"If everyone plays to their potential, we could sweep all nine event at state," said Lehmann commenting on the men's chances. "A sweep is something no previous tennis team has accomplished."

Health fair this week

by Kim Haaland

GRCC will host its annual health and fitness fair next week Friday. "Health is a Natural Resource" is the theme for this year's fair featuring speakers, displays, demonstrations and other activities in the LSC.

The fair begins Tuesday with exhibits in the LSC from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Kathy Gordon will lecture on Pre-Menstrual Syndrome at noon, along with aerobic dance demonstrations by Elaine Powers and three aerobic dance competition winners from H.D. Hotspurs. Anyone interested in having his/her body fat measured may do so by contacting Judi Names, campus health Services Nurse 24 hours prior, at ext. 330. Cost is $15.

Featured Wednesday is a Predictable Mile Run at Turnbull's Turf. Participants approximate the time it would take them to complete a mile. Individuals finishing closest to their approximated time will win a t-shirt.

Thursday features include the opportunity to become a blood donor and a tour of the college's challenge course. The course is designed for group rather than individual participation, promoting trust as well as physical fitness. The tour will be conducted at 11 a.m. Those interested may sign up with Mary Turnbull.

"The fair is open to the public free of charge, although there may be a fee for a few special services," noted Names. She continued on to say, "It is our goal to generate the interest of students, as well as members of the community, in the areas of health and fitness."

Among the organizations participating will be Auburn Speech & Hearing, Planned Parenthood, Washington State Lung Association, Great Earth Vitamins, South County Community Clinic, Auburn General Hospital and Women's Health Care Center.

The choice of a former generation

The two men walked on through the darkness until they reached the inner cellar door. One of the men took a small plastic card from his inside jacket pocket and inserted it into the small slot next to the door. It opened noiselessly. A long hall, lit by trac lighting, lay before them. After the fourth light there was another door that the man opened with an old fashioned metal key. They entered.

"Well," said the first man, "here it is. Not much to look at, I dare say." The second man studied the room a moment and then said, "As they say, the best things come in small packages. Ah, that's what we've come for, isn't it?" The second man pointed to an item on one of the many shelves in the room. The first man smiled, walked to the shelf and removed one of the bottles. It was tall, slim and curved inward somewhat in the middle. The glass had a very light green tint to it. The second man took the bottle from the first and wiped away some of the age-old dust. "Coca-Cola," he said to himself.

Three quarters of an hour later the two men sat in the comfort of the well appointed living room, a small table between their chairs and resting on the table top was the by now empty bottle and two glasses.

"Remarkable stuff, that," said the second man. "How long have you had it around?" The first man thought a bit and then said, "My grandfather was the one that bought up all of it, so that would have been in the late '80's. We've still several hundred bottles left, so I bring it out for special friends to partake of." "I feel quite honored," the second man said, "even more so when I consider how rare it really is. But refresh my memory, just why did they change the formula? I thought this was rather a popular drink for the time." "Oh, it was," answered the first man, "all over the world. Oh, yes, by the way that's real sugar you tasted in that sample." The first man smiled as the second man raised his eyebrows in surprise. "But as to your question," continued the first man, "the reason given was that's what people wanted, something that tasted more like Pepsi-Cola, another popular drink of that period."

"If you remember your mid to late 20th century history, you'll remember that's when a lot of lip service was paid to freedom of thought, even though in reality most people found it much easier to just follow the prescribed beliefs of what was believed to be trendy or in. Of course when the sugar blight hit in the '90's, all the drinks of that type went under, although Pepsi was by that time the only choice left to the people. That's what people never seem to learn, that by following the masses only because it seems like the right thing to do, they lose their freedom of choice. Then they woke up one morning and wonder why everyone and everything is the same."

The second man looked over the bottle on the table again. "Strange how the bottle sums up an age," he said quietly.

GRACC answers questions about sex

Dear GRACC:

I just started having sex with my boyfriend and I am afraid I will get pregnant. I am confused as to how the rhythm method works. I heard it is safe to have sex in the middle of the month. Also, I am afraid to ask if he has herpes or anything else; I don't want to embarrass him.

—"Cautious"

Dear Cautious:

I'll answer your second question first. Ask yourself how you consider that you know a person well enough to have sex with him, yet you don't know him well enough to ask a simple question. How can you be so considerate about his possible embarrassment and not even give equal consideration to you and your health? You need to revamp your priorities. Should a moment of embarrassment carry more weight than your right to a future that is free of the fear or burden of a sexually transmitted disease (STD)? So, ask him!

Since many STD's are not obvious, particularly in the early stages, sometimes the person who has contracted one may not even know it. Since with some STD's, SYMPTOMS MAY NOT OCCUR AT ALL, even asking the question may not provide a reliable answer. You're wise to be cautious.

Genital herpes, for example is incurable. If you are already sexually active, one of the ways to minimize the risk is through consistent and proper use of a contraceptive device. You would be well within your rights to insist that your boyfriend dig the little foil wrapped packet out of the moth-balled area of his wallet and apply it prior to contact with the genital area. Since STD's infect males and females without any particular preference, he's protecting himself as well as you.

Few men like using contraceptive devices, but the old stand-by argument about loss of sensation is hogwash. A minor loss of sensation cannot possibly justify the greater risk of either transmitting/contracting an STD or contributing to an unwanted pregnancy. A minor loss of sensation does not justify placing the burden of birth control or the risk of pregnancy ENTIRELY on the female partner in the relationship.

Regarding your first question then, please note that the only thing less reliable than the rhythm method—is no use of birth control at all. You're not the only one confused about "safe" times. In fact, the middle of the month is usually the PEAK period of fertility.

Most women release an egg (ovulate) about 14 days before the NEXT menstrual cycle. Fertility is usually within that period of 8-12 days—just before, during and after ovulation. So, unless you are absolutely regular, you have no way to count BACKWARD from the expected onset of your next menstrual cycle to accurately predict the time of fertility. Further, since sperm can live from 24-48 hours, if you're off by even one day, you can become pregnant. Most experts will agree there really is no guaranteeable "safe time"—only times that are better than others for becoming pregnant. Thus the rhythm method could be considered a form of "Russian Roulette," but here again, the use of a contraceptive device could possibly help minimize the risks.

The only 100 percent risk-free and effective method of birth control is abstinence. Since you have obviously chosen not to abstain, yet you do not want to become pregnant or risk being infected with an STD, an alternative is to insist on co-operation from your partner in the prevention of either possibility.

Please, talk to someone at Planned Parenthood, your family doctor, or go to the health room at the LSC for information. Get the facts about birth control so you'll be in a better position to choose a method that's best for you. Believe me, it's far less upsetting to ASK about birth control or disease prevention than to have to TELL someone you care about that you're either pregnant or infected. And don't let the thought enter your mind that it can't happen to you. It can.

Dear GRACC:

Everybody avoids me because I snort my nose and swallow my snot. I enjoy doing this and feel it is a natural part of life, but why some people find it offensive I don't know, help.

Dear S.D.:

People pass gas too. Yet, most people have enough consideration for others that they refrain from "cutting loose" in public.

Simply because a body function is natural does not make it exempt from being considered rude, crude and socially unacceptable. This is especially so when other people are affected by it.

Are you sure you really enjoy the sniffing and swallowing? Or is it possibly the attention you get that makes you persist in this method of alienating people?

Since mucus and blood are two of the most irritating substances to the stomach, logic would indicate that you taught yourself to like it. That being the case, you can teach yourself to control it.

On the otherhand, if you try or have tried and CAN'T stop, then you have to face the fact that YOU have a problem of some sort and need a professional to help you overcome it.

The first professional to see is a doctor, preferably an Ear, Nose and Throat specialist, to determine whether or not the problem is physical. Sinus or allergy problems could be causing excess mucus secretions.

If a physical cause can be eliminated, if the habit persists, then you need to see a counselor to help you to find the emotional stimulus behind it.

Stop trying to put the blame on other people. If you aren't happy that they avoid you, because of your habit, do something about it.

Dear GRACC:

Recently I've met a guy that I would enjoy being with. The problem is, I'm unsure of how to ask him for a date. Can you help me?

"C.A."

Dear C.A.

The first thing I'd advise is patience. Being attracted to a guy is no guarantee that you'll enjoy dating him. Take time to get to know him first. It really doesn't take long. Wait until you're really comfortable being with him and he with you, learn about the things he likes to do. When you reach that point make plans to go somewhere you know he'd enjoy going, a rock concert or a movie for example. Bring it up in a conversation and if he shows an interest, it will be the most natural thing in the world to ask him if he'd like to go too. Often it isn't the wording so much as the timing that makes things easier.

Woods named outstanding teacher

SCOTT CARPENTER/THE CURRENT

Dr. Judy Woods, winner of this year's Outstanding Teacher Award.

by Pam Gordon

This year's Outstanding Teacher Award, given by the Kent Chamber of Commerce, was presented to Dr. Judy Woods not only for her teaching ability but also for her service to the community. Dr. Woods is a member of the Kent City Council, and is involved with several Chamber of Commerce Committees, works at the Kent Senior Center, and works with low income health clinics in Kent and Renton.

"I feel that Green River is the 'par excellence' of community colleges and I enjoy it thoroughly. I have a positive feeling about Green River."

—Dr. Judy Woods

Dr. Woods was born and raised in Washington, received her Bachelor and Masters Degrees from Western Washington University, and her Doctorate from the University of Washington. Afterwards she taught at Wenatchee Valley College for four years before accepting a teaching position at GRCC. Eight years later she was offered the position of Division Chair which puts her in charge of Administration for the Social Sciences department. Some of the classes in this division are: Anthropology, Economics, Law Enforcement, Geography and Sociology. She also manages the budget, works with other division heads on the scheduling of classes and represents the division to the deans.

The award came as a real surprise according to Dr. Woods. "A lot of faculty members volunteer their time to the community and do so quietly and without recognition. They deserve praise and were just as deserving of the award or maybe even more."

Next year she will go on a sabbatical leave and plans to spend a great deal of time reading, writing and traveling to places that have to deal with what she teaches or will be teaching in the future. "I teach World Civilizations, Images of Western Man, Modern Africa and I hope to teach a U.S. History class in the future," said Dr. Woods.

"I feel that Green River is the 'par excellence' of community colleges and I enjoy it thoroughly. I have very positive feelings about Green River and I am especially appreciative of the support and friendship of my colleagues and I love working in such a beautiful environment."

"Just One of the Guys" ... just one average movie

by Kelly Anderson

Picture "Yentel" as a teenager in the 1980's. If you can imagine it, there's no use seeing "Just One of the Guys," because you already know how it ends.

Review

For those of you who've never seen Yentel, I'll fill you in. Terri Griffith is a female high school senior, but not for long.

Terri's ambition is to have her article about the "nutritional content" of cafeteria food sent to the Sun Tribune, a local paper.

Well, the contest is won by two males, which sends Terri on the warpath. She thinks they won because they are males (when, in fact, their subjects were more interesting). Terri now has the inspiration to become a male.

There is one problem, and his name is Kevin. Kevin is Terri's gorgeous boyfriend, with an equally gorgeous sportscar to match. What more could Terri possibly ask for, except maybe someone who took her seriously (which Kevin does not).

So, Terri the girl becomes Terri the guy, or so the advertisements say. She gets a very short haircut, some very baggy clothes, and lowers her voice a few octaves.

I think this movie tries to spare the viewers the boring aspect of reality. First off, Terri's parents are non-existent, except in phone calls from far away places, but Terri still manages to enroll in a neighboring high school. Figure that one out.

Another unrealistic part of the movie is the fact that no one from her original high school misses her, or asks where she has gone, even though she's been away for two weeks.

There are two other characters in this movie worth mentioning. One is Terri's obnoxious younger brother, Buddy. Buddy does a wonderful job acting like a 15 year old sex-crazed virgin. His whole ambition is to lose his latter title. The funny twist is that the girl he loses this title to, Sandy, was actually interested in Terri, who she thought was a guy. Are you confused yet? Well there's more.

Rick goes to the neighboring school, in which Terri enrolls (for two weeks). He's very shy, and really into James Brown. Rick and Terri become great friends, although Rick doesn't know that Terri is a girl.

Rick goes through a major transformation a la Terri. This change was only halfway believable to be though, because his whole personality changed, in one week!

Terri eventually finds herself very attracted to Rick, while Rick is attracted to the high school bullies girlfriend. This leaves Terri very unhappy and I'll leave you to see the movie.

Although the movie was lacking in originality, as well as reality, it had its moments. On my one-to-four scale, I'm going to give "Just One of the Guys" a two.

Women netters go for NWAACC title

by Mark Noesen

The Green River women's tennis team will try to capture the team title this weekend in Pasco. If the Gators can win the title, it would be a third NWAACC championship this school year for Green River. The Volleyball team took the title last fall and the Lady Gator basketball team won their championship this spring. The Gator softball team also has a shot at a title that could give the Gators four women's titles in one year.

The tennis team is a perfect 8-0 in league play. Their season record of 19-1 was blemished by Spokane, the favorites for this weekend's championships. Spokane beat the Gators 7-2 earlier this season.

"We are much different team, a much better team than when we played Spokane. The girls have been working hard all season long, they have had some really good practices lately," said coach Steve Sauers.

The championship tournament is a three day event, a player who is playing in both singles and doubles, (as most are) could end up playing as many as 12 matches in the three days.

"The double elimination makes for a long tourney and the best team doesn't always win," Sauers added.

The Gators have shut out teams in 11 matches this year winning each 9-0. This seasons league title was the seventh straight for the women's team.

Coach Sauers thinks Skagit Valley and Bellevue along with Spokane will be their main competition for the title.

Julie Stangle and Mary Beth Korpinen will put their undefeated 20-0 number one doubles record on the line. Stangle and Korpinen, number one and number two singles players, have not lost a set in doubles action this season.

Number six singles player Chris Peterson may have the best shot for an individual title for the Gators. Peterson sports a 19-1 singles record. Peterson teams up with Linda Halls in number three singles, they have a 19-1 record giving Peterson an excellent chance at two titles.

Kris Johnston goes into the tourney with a 18-2 record playing number four singles. Johnston will play number two doubles with Kelli Morton, the pair have a 16-4 doubles record. Morton has a 15-5 record in number three singles.

Stangle has an 18-2 singles record, Korpinen sports a 16-4 season total.

In all 15 teams will compete for the women's crown that will be awarded Saturday evening.

"The only bad part about the whole weekend is that I can't be with both teams at the same time," Sauers groaned. Both the men's and women's teams are competing for the NWAACC title but the men's tourney is in Yakima.

Sauers will send his two assistant coaches Dave Lester and volunteer Bob Ferguson with the women's team on Thursday.

"I haven't decided what to do after that," said a saddened Sauers.

What a dilemma, having two teams with a great chance at winning a NWAACC title. Oh well, Squers should survive the weekend and his Gators may complete what could easily be the most successful sports year in school history.

Kelly Morton, Green River tennis player, looks for a state title this weekend.

Ninth inning homers stop Gators

by Mark Noesen

Back to back, ninth inning homers by Fort Steilacoom highlighted a 11-2 win by the Raiders over the Gator baseball squad.

The Raiders pounded out 11 hits off Gator hurlers Jim Fullerton and Lonnie Rousey. The Gators also committed three errors that helped the Raiders match their 11 hits with 11 runs.

The Raiders scored all their runs in bunches scoring two in the third, three in the fifth, two in the seventh and four runs in the ninth.

Pat Riley went 2-3 for the Gators with a double and a long two run homer in the bottom of the sixth providing the Gators with their two runs.

The Gators will finish up their season this weekend with a pair today against league leading Edmonds and a twin bill tomorrow at Olympic.

GR splits doubleheader

by Mark Noesen

The Green River softball team split a doubleheader with the Edmonds Tritons Wednesday in Edmonds. The Tritons took the first game of the twin bill 5-2, the Gators won the nightcap with a seventh inning rally 9-7.

In the opener, the Gators jumped out early with two runs in the second inning. But Triton pitcher Denise Radovich, who gave up just five hits in the game, held the Gators scoreless the rest of the way.

Edmonds couldn't touch Gator pitcher Linda Lewallen until the fifth inning when they scored four runs to take the lead. Edmonds added one more in the sixth for the final score of 5-2.

In the nightcap, the Gators had to make a big late inning comeback scoring four runs in the top of the sixth and three in the seventh.

Down 5-2 in the sixth, the Gators shelled Radovich, who pitched all 14 innings in the doubleheader for Edmonds, for four runs and a 6-5 lead. But Edmonds struck back in the home half of the sixth with two runs of their own to regain the lead.

Three runs in the top of the seventh gave the Gators a split of the pair. Tammie Adams and Carolyn Piksa each drove in a pair of runs in the nightcap to pace the Gators.

The Gators will finish up the regular season today at Spokane with a doubleheader.

The Gators will begin their quest for the NWAACC softball title next Wednesday in Tacoma. The Gators will be one of the favorites for the title along with Wenatchee Valley.

Golf team captures invitational

by Mark Noesen

The Green River golf team won their second invitational of the year capturing the Lower Columbia Invitational Tuesday with a team score of 294, the Gators best score in two years.

The Gators, who edged Treasure Valley by four shots, were led by Chuck Aest. Aest shot a one over par 72 tying him with four others for second place. Bellevue's Kirk Johanson took individual honors with a one under 70.

Dave Fagan, Bruce Christy and Jody Sanders shot 73, 74 and 75 respectively for the victorious Gators.

The Gators are a perfect 7-0 in league play and will meet 6-1 Bellevue today for the league title. If the Gators lose they will still share the region title with Bellevue, having beaten Bellevue earlier this year.

The Gators will be one of six teams sending full teams to the Northwest Athletic Association of Community Colleges Golf Championships. The eight schools that did not qualify for the championships will each send their best golfer for the individual title.

The NWAACC championship will be played in Vancouver, Wa at the Royal Oakes Country Club.

"It's a difficult course, one of the best courses in Washington," said golf coach Mike Peluso.

Each player will shoot two rounds of 18 holes, all on Monday. The six schools sending full teams have six players with the top four scores counting.

"I think a score of 600 will take the team title," commented Peluso. "The scores should be a little higher because the guys must play 36 holes in one day," he added.
